

I am adamantly opposed to the use of Cellular Telephones aboard airborne aircraft and request that the FCC continue the current ban. Such usage would be a nuisance and unnecessary distraction to other passengers who are in a captive environment. In the event of an emergency it could lead to life safety messages not being heard with serious consequences. Also, a growing number of people are reacting to the intrusion of cellular phone conversations by using jamming devices to interfere with the calls. Although such devices are illegal, they are difficult to detect and their use is expanding. If brought on board an aircraft they could interfere with the aircraft navigational systems. There is absolutely no need for cellular phone use on board airborne aircraft. Please continue the ban.
